Stories of Archaeological Discovery at Dublin Port, the River Liffey and the Irish Sea

A series of lunchtime lectures in November organised by the National Museum of Ireland – Archaeology with Dublin Port.

WEDNESDAY 7 NOVEMBER

First Port of Call - National Museum finds from Dublin Port, from Sea to River

Nessa O'Connor, an Archaeologist and Curator at the National Museum of Ireland will give this first lecture with a focus on the Museum's involvement over many years with the archaeology of Irish ports.

LOCATION: This lecture will take place at the National Museum of Ireland - Archaeology, Kildare Street, Dublin 2.

WEDNESDAY 14 NOVEMBER

The Working River, a Harmonious Relationship between City and Port

The presentation by Niall Brady, Maritime Archaeologist and Director of the Archaeological Diving Company Ltd, highlights the work being done within Dublin Port as part of the Alexandra Basin Redevelopment Project, and shows some of the findings that have been made.

LOCATION: This lecture will take place at Port Centre, Alexandra Road, Dublin 1, (5 mins from Point Luas Stop).

WEDNESDAY 21 NOVEMBER

Mapping, Investigating and Documenting Historic Shipwrecks off the Dublin Coast

Karl Brady, Underwater Archaeology Unit, National Monuments Service, will present an illustrated update on research undertaken through mapping, documenting and investigating some of the many shipwrecks lost off the Dublin Coast with a particular focus on discoveries made in recent times.

LOCATION: This lecture will take place at the National Museum of Ireland - Archaeology, Kildare Street, Dublin 2.
